› Well-being and Time

What we understand by “well-being” or “happiness” and how to attain it has recently become the subject of increased interest in ethics and empirical sciences.

The subject of the conference, Well-being and Time, will be the significance of the temporality and finiteness of human life, and also the temporally limited availability of the goods required for well-being.

We will not only discuss fundamental questions related to the topic, but also questions of application, in particular from bioethics. Insights from philosophy as well as from empirical sciences will be taken into account.
